From the Author

From Edie Glaser: All Children Have Different Eyes is the book I wish my classmates, parents, and teachers had when I was in elementary school. It provides the awareness that peers needed to understand why I played differently. It also provides realistic examples of how I could have answered the many questions about why I looked at things differently. This book finally breaks the silence that thousands of kids with visual impairment and physical limitations live with every day.

From Dr. Burgio: By reading All Children Have Different Eyes with their children, parents and teachers will be able to start important conversations about their daily challenges in the classroom and on the playground. This can lead to life-changing opportunities for positive social development. To help in this effort, the back of the book includes explanations of the social competencies modeled by each of the characters as well as specific activities for parents and teachers to use with their child as they nurture healthy play and social interactions.
