- a new section on legal reading

- the section on writing memos includes new examples and an additional chapter on writing more sophisticated memos
- the increased use of Practice Pointers and Questions reflects the latest research on active learning, while the emphasis on teaching underlying structures applies research on transfer of learning
- new, short sections raise issues relating to professionalism and the role of lawyers
- the chapter on effective paragraphs and the sections on Legal Writing for English-as-a-Second-Language Students and on bias-free and gender-neutral language are all thoroughly updated
- new material offers advice on how to avoid procrastination and other writing obstacles
