Editorial Review

From Booklist

“Moderation can wait—plenty of time for that later,” says acclaimed poet and anthologist Nye. She knows how to reach teens, and this lively collection by young contemporary writers is rooted in the strong, emotional particulars of family, friendship, childhood memories, school, dislocation, war, and more; interestingly, there is almost no talk of sex or romance. The spare lines are passionate, wry, irreverent, and eloquent about meaning found in daily-life scenarios. One poet describes a meditative moment with her cat that “destroys all my knitting to teach me about impermanence.” Another prays for a soldier, a “kindergarten best friend” who has returned from Baghdad. In several selections, immigrants remember their arrival in the U.S. In a brief, appended biography, one poet describes her draw to poetry: “Unresolved, uncomfortable, and sometimes repulsive moments of memory can be made somehow graceful through writing.” Teens will connect with the passionate, unmoderated feelings that are given clarity and shape in each poem. Grades 7-12. --Hazel Rochman

Review

“Alternately raw, poignant, quiet, and loud...Readers will have no trouble finding little pieces of themselves in this beautifully orchestrated collection.” (School Library Journal (starred review))

“Gripping and provocative in its portrayal of vastly different lives and experiences, strong sense of place, and sheer exuberance.” (Publishers Weekly)

“[An] exceptionally well-selected collection.” (The Horn Book)
